CREATIVITY COACH CHALLENGES BELGIAN CREATIVITY TRAINER TO MAKE ART HE LOVES

It sounds easy, simple even, to make art you love. But try it. Recall anything you've made, and sure enough, the ever-vigilant inner critic is there squelching your enthusiasm. It's easier to judge than to love.

That's why Cynthia Morris, a certified coach and creative intelligence consultant, challenged Belgian colleague Karl Raats to make a painting he loves.

Raats, a Creativity Trainer and Facilitator in Applied Creative Thinking has decided to turn thought into action. Raats has embarked on a five-year project called Pinching the Ostrich. His mission: to grow as a person and as a creative pioneer through a series of challenges. Raats' challenges include getting two university degrees, five professional accreditations, ten fears to overcome and yes, 20 creative challenges to meet.

Raats is blogging about Pinching the Ostrich and how well he's meeting Morris's challenge at <http://pinchintheostrich.typepad.com/>

Follow Raats' Pinching the Ostrich journey and see if he can pull off the challenge of making art he loves. Read more about Morris's life as a creative nomad at <http://www.journeyjuju.com/>
